

ABOUT THE TRAINER

Dixie L. King, Ph.D., received her doctorate in cultural anthropology from UCLA in 1996, with a specialization in medical and psycho-cultural studies. She has specialized in the evaluation of primary prevention and intervention programs, substance abuse treatment, and integrated service delivery systems for over 30 years.

Dr. King has provided training at both the State and federal level in needs assessment, fidelity to evidence-based programs and practices, group facilitation skills, leadership development, and cultural diversity. She has worked extensively with schools to integrate school-wide behavioral norms change with PBIS, Student Assistance Programs and early intervention services.

In 1997, Dr. King founded Transforming Local Communities, Inc. Today her company provides training, research, and evaluation services to school districts, public and private non-profit agencies, and businesses throughout California.

In this experiential training, you will learn:

- How to identify the characteristics of resilience behind at-risk behaviors;
- How youth play out family roles at school and in other public settings and why;
- How to use the stages of group process to build communication and social skills;
- How to manage behavior in group in a way that builds skills and promotes learning and respect;
- How to distinguish between support and therapy in group settings;
- How to integrate what group members are learning with norms and expectations for behavior in school and other social settings;
- How to use facilitation skills to enhance fidelity to any evidence-based curriculum; and
- How to transfer facilitation skills to enhance your effectiveness in any group setting.
